

ARCANISTUDIO · V1.0 · AUGUST 2026

Brand essentials

The short version — the logo, the colours, the type and the voice, in nine pages. For anyone producing marketing work in the brand's name.

FULL GUIDELINES AVAILABLE ON REQUEST

Warm, editorial, crafted

Confident and premium, never corporate. Everything we publish should feel considered — like someone made a decision, not picked a template.

Test before anything ships: could a competitor swap their logo onto this and have it still work? If yes, it isn't finished.

THE NAME

arcaniStudio

One word. Lowercase a, capital S — even at the start of a sentence. Never “Arcani Studio”, “ArcaniStudio” or all caps.

WHAT WE DO

Web and app development, end to end

Design, code, testing and deployment handled by one team. Clients own the code, design and data on final payment.

WHO WE'RE TALKING TO

Founders and product leads

They're comparing agencies and want proof of craft. They respond to specifics, not adjectives.

One mark, three colours

The mark takes the colour of the text around it. There is no separate white file to keep track of — ink, white, or the single grey for logo walls.

CLEAR SPACE

A quarter of the mark's width on every side. Nothing enters that band — no type, no rule, no photo edge, no other logo.

SMALLEST SIZE

24 px on screen, 8 mm in print. Below that the carved corners close up and it reads as a blob.

Ink on cream. The default, everywhere.

White on ink. Dark layouts and covers.

Grey #545454. Only in logo walls and partner strips.

WITH THE NAME

Switzer Semibold, matched to the mark's height, gap of half a mark width.

Four ways to break it

The geometry is the identity. Scale it, recolour it to one of the three approved fills, and otherwise leave it alone.

Never rotate. The mark already implies motion — turning it just looks like a mistake.

Never stretch. Hold shift. The artboard is square and stays square.

Never recolour. No gradients, no brand orange fill, no client colours.

Never box or shade it. No holding shape, no drop shadow, no glow, no 3D.

Also: don't redraw it by hand, don't trace it from a screenshot, and don't drop it onto a busy photo — put it on a plain area that clearly contrasts with the fill you picked.

One accent, used rarely

Roughly 70% warm surface, 25% ink and grey, 5% orange. If two things on a layout are orange, one of them is wrong.

THREE RULES

1. One orange element per layout — the button, or the accent word, not both.
2. Never set body copy in orange. On cream it's unreadable at normal size.
3. Never add a second accent colour for a “secondary” action. Secondary means less weight, not a new hue.

Brand orange. Badges, highlights, accents. The one colour people should remember.

Deep orange. Buttons and accent words — the readable one for white or small text.

Papaya. Soft tinted backgrounds and glows. Never for text.

Cream. The default background — warm, never plain white.

Ink. All headings and body copy, and the dark background.

GREYS — FOR SECONDARY TEXT, BORDERS AND DIVIDERS

Two faces, one job each

Switzer carries everything. Reckless Neue appears once per layout, on the phrase that matters — always in deep orange.

RULES

- One serif accent per layout. Two is one too many.
- No all-caps sentences. Uppercase is for small labels only.
- Keep lines to 60–75 characters so copy stays readable.
- If neither font is available (a partner deck, an email client), fall back to system sans — never substitute a lookalike display font.

Say the specific thing

Direct, plain, backed by a number. We sound like people who have actually shipped the thing — not like a brochure.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH ARE PEERS

French copy is written for French readers, not translated from the English. Same structure, same length, never machine-translated.

What “on brand” looks like

Same three ingredients every time: cream or ink field, one orange element, one serif accent phrase.

On dark backgrounds the accent shifts to the lighter orange #FF852F — the deep orange goes muddy against ink.

Eight things to check

01 The name is spelled arcaniStudio. Lowercase a, capital S, one word.

02 The mark is ink, white or grey. Never orange, never a gradient.

03 Nothing crowds the mark. A quarter of its width kept clear on all sides.

04 One orange element. The button or the accent word — not both.

05 The serif appears once. One accent phrase per layout, in orange.

06 The copy has a number in it. A day count, a percentage, a stage.

07 No buzzwords. Read the banned list on page 07 before you send.

08 Text is readable. Dark on cream, white on ink. Never orange body copy.

WHERE THE FILES LIVE

Logo, fonts, colour tokens and both language versions of the copy sit in the website repository. Ask before recreating any of them by hand.

FONTS

Switzer — Indian Type Foundry.

Reckless Neue — Displaay.

Check the licence before using either in a client's own branding.
